Georges Audet, Labyrinths, 2010
Installation (detail)

Labyrinths is a representation of the artist's creative experience in intimate relation with his studio. His working environment and its many characteristics were taken as the very subject of a transposition.

Georges Audet has created four mobile sculptures resulted from this process, reproducing and representing at different scales the studio's configuration.

This work was created from the materials to be found on site, in the manner of a quilt or a construction set – a series of manipulations involving composition, decomposition, and recomposition.

Georges Audet defines himself as a researcher and a creator. In his work, he explores and represents the worlds of legends, myths and archetypes, as well as the idea of invisible and imaginary architectures. His recent work revolves around the idea of the labyrinth – a research related to experimentation with space and scale.

In his works – constructions, enclosures, deconstructed and revisited architectural elements, cabinets, artist's books – the visitor is put in touch with a world at once familiar and fabulous, where time/space is at once concrete, ambiguous, and uncertain.
